Emotional Intelligence Foundations - Quick reference

Foundation course | Trainer: Maya Thompson

The key ideas

- Why emotional intelligence matters at work: A skill, not a personality type

- What it is, and what it is not: It is noticing, understanding and choosing

- The four parts of emotional intelligence: Self-awareness: noticing your own emotions

- Mapping your triggers: Triggers follow patterns

- The ninety second pause: Breathe

- Reading the room: Notice who is speaking and who is quiet

- Putting it together on a normal Tuesday: Trigger, then pause, then choice

- Your next steps: Pick one trigger to work on this week

Words to know

Emotional intelligence: The ability to notice emotion, understand what it is telling you and choose a useful response.

Trigger: A situation, person or moment that reliably pulls you off balance.

Self-awareness: Noticing your own emotions and reactions as they happen.

Ninety second pause: A three-step routine for the gap between a trigger and your response: breathe, name the feeling, decide the next step.

Outcomes

- Recognise your own emotional patterns

- Use a simple pause routine under pressure

- Read the room in meetings more accurately
